The painting is a vertical composition featuring a traditional East Asian building, possibly a pavilion or a temple structure, with a prominent red roof. The roof is rendered with thick, textured brushstrokes in various shades of red, pink, and orange. The building's walls are dark, and a window with a wooden frame is visible. The scene is surrounded by dense, vibrant green foliage, including ferns and other leafy plants, which are also painted with thick, expressive brushstrokes. The overall style is reminiscent of modern Chinese ink and wash painting, characterized by bold colors and visible brushwork. The text "Rama IX Art Museum Foundation" is centered in the middle of the image.

A painting of red flowers in a landscape. The flowers are bright red and appear to be in bloom, with dark, slender stems. The background consists of layered, textured bands of color, including shades of blue, green, and yellow, suggesting a hilly or mountainous terrain. The overall style is expressive and somewhat abstract, with visible brushstrokes and a rich, textured surface. A watermark is visible across the center of the image.
